In the pronunciations, kh denotes a uvular guttural sound.

Meneer, mevrouw and mejuffrouw are all written with a small letter when they precede a name. When typing, de Heer is used instead of meneer and Dhr. is used on envelopes. Mevrouw and mejuffrouw are abbreviated as Mevr. and Mej. In addition, Mw. can be used as an equivalent of the English Ms.

Pronunciation

Dutch letters	English sound ch	guttural sound, made at back of mouth sch	s followed by guttural ch sound g	same as ch, guttural sound from back of mouth w	like v before r, otherwise like w but with bottom lip against top teeth v	like v, but sometimes closer to f r	either rolled or guttural j	y as in yes
sj	sh as in ship
tj	ch as in chip
aa	ah as in father, but longer ee	ay as in hail, but shorter ie	ee as in neat, but shorter oo	oh as in boat
oe	oo as in pool, but shorter eu	ur as in hurt, but with lips rounded uu	ew, but with lips rounded (sound not found in English) a	ah as in father, but shorter e	eh as in bed
i	ih as in bit
o	aw as in paw, with lips rounded u	ir as in dirt, but very short ei / ij	between the sounds in "light" and "late" aai	combination of aa and ie oei	combination of oe and ie ooi	combination of oo and ie ou / au	like ow, as in house eeuw	combination of ee and oe ieuw	combination of ie and oe uw	combination of uu and oe ui	combination of a and uu

The consonants s, f, h, b, d, z, l, m, n, and ng are pronounced the same way in Dutch as in English. P, t, and k are pronounced without the puff of air (called aspiration.) Sometimes the g is pronounced like zh in words borrowed from French. One last vowel sound is found in various Dutch spellings. It is pronounced like uh, as in along or sofa. For example, this sound is found in de (the), een (a), aardig (nice), and vriendelijk (kind).

Nouns and Gender

All nouns have a gender in Dutch, either common (de words) or neuter (het words). It is hard to guess which gender a noun is, so it is best to memorize the genders when memorizing vocabulary. However, two-thirds of Dutch words are common gender (because the common gender has combined the former feminine and masculine genders.) It may be easier to memorize which nouns are neuter, and then assign common gender to the rest.

All diminutives (words ending in -je) and infinitives used as nouns, as well as colors, metals, compass directions, and all words that end in -um, -aat, -sel, -isme are neuter.

Most nouns beginning with ge- and ending with -te are neuter, as are most nouns beginning with ge-, be-, and ver-.

Common noun endings include: -aar, -ent, -er, -es, -eur, -heid, -ij, -ing, -teit, -tie.
